Morning approx. 08:00: FRAM arrives at West Point Island.

We hope to do a landing here at West Point today. Weather permitting; we will begin our landing by calling boat group no 1. All groups are called one after the other. Please do not approach deck 2 until your group is called, to avoid long line-ups. This can be a wet landing, rubberboots or high waterproof goretex shoes are recommended.

Smoking is not allowed on the island!

West Point has been in the Napier's family since its first settlement in 1879. Allan and Suzan are now taking care of the place for the Napier's. From here, the hike to Devil's Nose is nearly 2.5km (1.5miles) but seems much shorter somehow on the return journey. The couple now living on the Island sometimes offers a ten minute, bumpy Land Rover ride instead. Devil's Nose overlooks the sea surrounded by cliffs and is home to several thousand majestic black browed albatross and several hundred rough and tumble rockhopper penguins.

Carcass Island lies to the North West of the Falkland Islands archipelago and takes its name from the HMS Carcass which visited in the late 18th century. At present there is only two all year residents and a few more in the summer, it is the present owners Rob and Lorraine McGill who have lived on the island for about 30 years. They continue the conservationist traditions of the previous owners planting and restoring the tussac grass for use as controlled winter animal grazing areas. There is about 900 sheep on the island, and in addition tourism makes up for income as well. Unlike much of the Falkland Islands Carcass Island is water-rich and has several water resources. A generator gives electricity and the traditional fuel, peat, was replaced recently by the more convenient oil and gas which is
